GOULD'S ACADEMY,

BETHEL, MAINE.

THE SPRING TERM OF TWELVE WEEKS

— BEGINS —

Tuesday, Feb. 26th, 1878.

BOARD OF INSTRUCTION.

D. T. TIMBERLAKE, A.M., Principal.....	Teacher of Ancient Languages and Sciences.
D. R. HASTINGS, First Assistant.....	Teacher of Mathematics.
F. E. TIMBERLAKE, Second Assistant.....	Teacher of Common English Branches.
	Teacher of French and German.
F. B. HODGKINS.....	Teacher of Penmanship and Book-Keeping.
Miss LAURA C. HALL.....	Teacher of Music and Oil Painting.

COURSES OF STUDY.

- I. Introductory Course.
- II. Academic or English Course.
- III. Classical Course.
- IV. College Preparatory Course.

The Courses of Study, which have been arranged with much care, cannot fail to meet the wants of all, and as that school is most efficient which is best classified, it is earnestly hoped that every pupil will follow some one of the courses as nearly as possible.

It is the design of the Teachers to make this one of the most profitable terms of the school. They will take special pains to devote themselves personally to the needs of each pupil, and all classes will receive a thorough and faithful drill. Nearly an hour will be given to each recitation. The classes in Penmanship and Book-Keeping will be under the charge of a teacher of experience, and it is believed that students will here find rare advantages for pursuing these studies. Thorough instruction will also be furnished in Music and Oil Painting.

A strict record of each student's rank, deportment, absences, etc., will be kept and published monthly. Students will be seated in school according to their general rank.

RATES OF TUITION.

Languages .....	$6.00
Higher English .....	5.50
Common English .....	5.00
Book-Keeping, extra .....	1.50
Penmanship, extra .....	1.25
Music, 20 lessons, extra.....	10.00
Oil Painting, 20 lessons, extra.....	10.00
Incidentals .....	.25

No deduction will be made for absence the first or last week of the term, nor will any bill be made for less than six weeks except in cases of sickness. Students leaving before the close of the term, will be charged 55, 50, and 45 cents per week.

Board in private families, including fuel, lights, and washing, can be secured at $2.75 to $3.50 per week. Pleasant rooms for self-board at reasonable rates.

For board, rooms, or further information, application can be made to the Principal, Bethel, Me.

THE GOLDEN KEY.

Westward the sun is declining,
His day's march nearly done;
A last dying ray making golden
The head of the little one,
Who, tired even of playing,
Patiently stands at my knee,
Trying so hard to remember
The mystical A, B, C.

Lower the bright curls are drooping
Over the half-shut eyes,—
At length, with a whispered murmur,
Asleep in my lap he lies,—
While I sit in the gathering shadows—
And Fancy whispers to me
Of the golden mine he will open—
Only with A, B, C.

What wonderful fairy-stories
Will gladden his baby-days!
Tales of the Danish Poet—
Grim giants and sprightly fays;
He will go with Sinbad the Sailor,
To battle on every sea;
And be cast on Crusoe's Island,
Led thither by A, B, C.

Then, after a few fleeting Summers
Are dropped by Time in his flight,

The Table Round of King Arthur
Will have an added Knight;
Or, with the bard of Scotland,
He'll wander by Ayr and Dee,
Using a talisman magic
Moulded by A, B, C.

The Past gathers back the curtain
Shrouding the vanished years,
And on the slow-moving canvas
Scene after scene appears;
The rulers of mighty nations,
With warriors of every degree,
Pass in a Grand Reviewing,
Marshalled by A, B, C.

Statesmen, and Poets, and Sages,
Wielding both sword and pen,
Come from graves almost forgotten
To the living world again;
And the crosses so many carried
Were not borne in vain, if we
Take to our hearts the lesson—
That is hidden in A, B, C.

We know that "Knowledge is Power,"
But often wish in vain,
That it were sometimes given
Less intermixed with Pain!
Yet, we hope the baby sleeper
Now dreaming on my knee,
Will reach the fair field of Wisdom—
Whose gateway is A, B, C.

"KNOW THYSELF."

Pope says, "The proper study of mankind is man"; and in this expression we find much true philosophy. We should know ourselves physically, mentally, and morally. We have bodies to be cared for; bodies "fearfully and wonderfully made," and to properly care for them we must know something of their structure, of the nature of their wants, and of the sources from which these wants must be supplied. Many persons are criminally ignorant of the bodies they are carrying through the world, and the consequences of such ignorance are visible all around us.

But we have also a mental nature, which is more wonderful than the body. It is astonishing to contemplate the powers of the mind; how it is capable of going on along the great highway of progression, ever gathering from the store-house of knowledge, and ever increasing in capacity as it increases in fullness. A mind of such vast powers should be cultivated, so as to become strong and able to reach after, take hold of, and solve the great problems of the universe. But many persons are ignorant of the wonderful powers of the mind; and they are ignorant of these powers because they do not properly exercise them.

In addition to the physical and mental, we also have a moral or religious nature; we have affections, desires, and aspirations, and these need to be cultivated and sent out in the right direction, out towards that which is true and heavenly. This is essential to a true manhood.

Now, as "the proper study of man is man," as our life here is short, this work should be commenced early, and the young should be favored with all the facilities for prosecuting this study to the very best advantage. Our free school system is a great help in this direction. Then, we have the Academy and the College. All places cannot have a College, but most places, of any considerable size, should have a good High School or an Academy. Our town has an Academy, which is pleasantly located, and has, at present, a good teacher. But still there is room for improvement. The building is not what it should be. It should, by all means, be put in good condition, made attractive and comfortable, and be furnished with good maps, globes, chemical and all other necessary apparatus to aid in teaching. Cannot something be done in this direction?

OUR VOYAGE.

The day we set sail there were in the port some ten or fifteen vessels, bound on different voyages, waiting for a pilot boat. When she came down the river, they all weighed anchor together and we soon got under way. It was a beautiful sight—so many sails in close company under a smart breeze, and I stood on the deck, watching them in a mood of mingled happiness and sorrow till we reached the Cape of Marillanes.

I cannot give an exact description of the many handsome things which I saw,—the splendid coasts of Cuba, all white with their verdant woods, the different colors of the water, the magnificent panorama that the town of Sagua presented to our sight, the blue sky and the gentle breeze, all were very beautiful; yet I was some sad as I was to be separated from my own country, my relatives, and all my dearest friends.

We made Cape Marillanes about twilight, and all having shortened sail we waited while the pilot boat passed from one to another, taking off the pilots. In a few minutes every sail was spread again, and away they went with a hard breeze, some one course and some another, leaving us, in less than an hour, apparently alone on the great deep. By this time the clouds had grown black, the wind had increased to a gale, and as the order was given to "close-reef the topsail," I took a last look at Cape Cristo, just visible in the far edge of the horizon, and went below. Those only who have plunged about in a cold rain-storm at sea can imagine how I amused myself for the next seven days.

On the eighth day I again came on deck. It was a day to make one in love with life. The remains of the long storm before which we had been running for a week, lay in white masses around the horizon; the sky overhead was a deep blue; the sun was warm, and the wind steady and fresh, but soft as the breath of a child. We were in the Gulf Stream. The water there, as you know, is always blood-warm, and the temperature of the air mild at all seasons, and just then like a south land wind in June. Hundreds of sea-birds were flying around us; the spongy sea-weeds washed from the West Indian rocks, a thousand miles away in the Southern latitudes, floated by in large masses; the sailors, barefooted and bareheaded, were scattered upon the riggings, doing "fair weather work," and just in the edge of the horizon, hidden by every wave, stood two vessels with all sails spread, making, with the only fair wind they had had in many days, for America.

As I came on deck I looked round, and for an hour or two I could scarcely realize that it was not a dream. We were just then in the gorge of the sea, and looking over the leeward quarter I saw far away what I can only describe as a hill of dazzling blue, thirty or forty feet in real altitude, but sloped so far away that the white crest seemed to me a cloud, and the space between a sky of wonderful beauty.

The single view of the ocean which I got at that moment will be impressed upon my mind forever. Nothing I ever saw on land can compare with it for splendor. No sunset view, no lake scene, no waterfall, no glen or mountain-gap ever approached it. The waves had had no time to "knock down," as the sailors phrase it. It was a storm at sea without the hurricane and the rain. I looked off toward the horizon and the majestic swells were heaving into the sky upon the distant limit, and between it and my eyes there was an immense plain flashing with green and blue and white, and changing place and color so rapidly as to be painful to the sight. I stood holding by the taffrail for an hour, gazing on it with a childish delight and wonder. The spray had broken over me repeatedly, and as we shipped half a sea at the scùppers at every roll, I was standing half the time up to my knees in water; but the warm wind on my forehead, after a week's confinement to my berth, and the excessive beauty lavished upon my sight, were so delicious that I forgot all, and it was only in compliance with the captain's repeated suggestion that I changed my position.

I mounted the quarter-deck and, pulling off my shoes, like a school-boy, sat over the leeward rails, and, with my feet dipping into the warm sea at every lurch, gazed at the glorious spectacle for hours. I do not hesitate to say that the formation, progress, and final burst of a sea-wave, in a bright sun, is the most beautiful sight under heaven.

INFLUENCE.

That power which one mind exerts over another, is called influence; and all of us are more or less governed by its sway. Perhaps none in the world, however talented or titled, can rise above it; and it is, at least, a pleasant thought that no one can sink so low that he is entirely beyond its reach. It is easy in the seclusion of our homes to live after our own opinions, but as soon as we cross the threshold of the school-room, or mingle in the active duties and pleasures of this busy world, how often we find ourselves living after the opinions of others. Emerson says "One's chief want in life is somebody who can make us do what we can." I think this definition reveals to us that our lives depend upon the influences which surround us, and that we should select for our friends those persons who will strive to exert a beneficial influence.

Michael Angelo's first work of sculpture was the formation of a fawn's head from snow. This work was so conspicuous that it attracted the notice of Lorenzo, the great art critic, who complimented him upon his talent. He responded, "Ah! you urge me on. I will yet merit more than the praise you bestow." His resolution was nobly fulfilled, and at ninety he was honored by all the world as the great master of art.

There is no period in which the influences brought to bear upon us affect us so seriously as in youth. These influences form our habits; and bad habits, when once rooted, are with great difficulty eradicated. In the school-room even the manners of our associates have their effect. Does not the presence of a person who is nice in regard to the use of the English language cause us to be more particular in the choice of our words?

Let each of us strive to exert an influence which will aid our companions in their efforts "to do what they can."

Not much need of shoveling paths this Winter. The path to the Academy door has been brushed out but once this term.

Having undertaken for the first time in our life the arduous task of editing a paper, we hardly know how to accomplish it. Even when we take up our pen to write the first lines, our hand trembles and our thoughts become confused and oppress our head. Though our position is a difficult one and our ability poor, we must endeavor to fill our place, if not with the correctness and elegance of a distinguished writer, at least with the modesty of one who, without any pretensions, wishes only to do the best he can.

We are no writers. We have never written for the public, but, having accepted the editor's chair, which was offered to us with much kindness, we should be very ungrateful if we did not try to do what we could to prove that we knew how to appreciate the distinction and trust bestowed on us. So, brothers, let us not be discouraged, but go manfully to the work, and soon our hard task will be finished.

Our readers must not expect too much from this our first effort, but try to overlook our mistakes, thus encouraging us for future work.

COMMON SCHOOLS.

The general awakening throughout the State in the cause of education, is an omen for good. The Primary School comes in for a large share of the advantage to be gained from this awakening. It is here that the foundations are laid for an education, and a majority of the scholars in the State never go beyond this. Hence the great importance of expending most of the money appropriated by the State in raising our common schools to a high standard of excellence. How shall we do this? First, by impressing the minds of parents and guardians with the necessity of providing well for instruction in the fundamental, necessary branches of education. Edward Everett remarked in relation to the instruction in our common schools, "Give us first the necessities, Spelling, Reading, Writing, English Grammar, Arithmetic, History, and Geography, and afterward, if we can afford it, the luxuries, Latin, Greek, Algebra, &c." I am aware that this may seem "old fogyish" to the young gentlemen and young ladies of to-day, but if they will bear with me a little I will explain. I can do so more easily by a few examples: "Please except this from a friend," was written in a young lady's album by a young man in college. "Their was three of there company lost," by a college graduate. "Them books belong to the library" by another. We might multiply examples like these, showing the neglect of early instruction in the Spelling-book and Grammar. Second, this awakened interest will demand good teachers, and the demand will be supplied from those attending our Normal Schools and Academies. Supply will as surely follow demand in teaching as in trade, and when a community is willing to pay for a good teacher and require one, the demand will be supplied. What constitutes a good teacher we leave for a future number, as well as other matters pertaining to our common schools and academies.

TEARS.

"Tears that trembled on the lashes in affliction's keenest hours,
Were as dews of Summer evenings on the thirsty lips of flowers."

How sweet is the relief which the sorrow-laden heart obtains from tears! They are the channels through which the soul finds solace, when weighed down by cares and perplexing anxieties too heavy to be borne in silence or too affecting to be relieved by words.

Although they cannot restore the dead, nor change the decrees of Providence, yet they are the means of lightening the burdens of many heavy, aching hearts. As the dews and showers of Spring are needed to refresh the tender blades of grass and to expand the tiny leaf-buds day by day under the genial influence of the sun, so the work of tears is to subdue and soften the heart grown stony and bitter with grief. They not only soothe and soften, but they also have power to accomplish often what every other influence fails to do. The tearful, earnest words of one who feels the solemn import of the truth he utters, are much more effective than those of one who speaks coldly and unfeelingly.

Tears are common to all classes and all ages. The mariner, tossed upon the bosom of the ever-restless ocean, his heart already chilled by its storms till the fountains of feeling are almost sealed, sometimes on a Summer's evening, as he beholds the sun "rocking like a god" upon the western waves, thinks of home, and his heart yearns for other days, and his eyes glisten with tears—or was it nothing but a reflection from the shining wavelets?

The soldier, sleeping on his grassy couch after the heat and turmoil of battle, dreams of home and the loved ones who are watching and praying for him. He seems to see their familiar faces and to hear their voices softly mingled in the evening hymn—he wakes—the tear-drops quickly start to find it all a dream.

The mourner sheds a gentle, pensive tear at the recollection of departed friends. How such are blessed by the thought that their dear ones are at rest, nevermore to be wearied by the burdens of life; that they have passed the pearly gates, by angel hands thrown open to receive them. How precious and comforting to them, as they were to the sorrowing sisters, Mary and Martha, must be the tears of our Saviour, shed in sympathy.

The friend sheds the sympathetic tear while listening to the tale of another's woes. The tears of such a one express tenderness. They denote that the warmer and better emotions have been stirred within the heart. They also inspire perfect trust. We have confidence in the affections of one who weeps with those who weep, believing that a tear is sufficient proof of his sincerity. It has been said by one who possessed, perhaps, a more perfect knowledge of human nature than any other writer, that a tear

"Is Nature's sign to know an honest heart by;
Shame on those breasts of stone that cannot melt
In soft adoption of another's sorrow."

A Peri, standing at the gates of Paradise, wept to think that the enjoyment of so glorious a home had been forfeited by her race. The angel who guarded the entrance, seeing her tears, told her there was one hope still; that it was written in the book of fate,

"The Peri yet may be forgiven
Who brings to this Eternal Gate
The gift that is most dear to heaven."

Quickly the Peri searched o'er the earth and bore its choicest treasures to the angel, but all in vain; "the crystal bar of Eden moved not." At length, as she was slowly winging her flight, she saw a traveler, who had stopped to quench his thirst at a rivulet gently flowing at his feet, turn his brow, on which was stamped the sins of years, toward a beautiful child kneeling among the flowers and raising its eyes to heaven in prayer. At the sight of that child he wept—"blest tears of soul-felt penitence." The Peri caught one of these precious drops and flew with it to the angel, who received it with a smile, and joyfully the gates flew open.

Errata.—In our last issue, for Gustavus A. Hastings, read Gideon A. Hastings. A. Grover was Major of the 13th Maine Volunteers. Mr. Lyman W. Russell, of Bethel, informs me that he planted the pine tree in the corner of the Academy lot. Mr. Moses Soule, the Principal, told him to set it there, and he was laughed at by the boys on account of the location. For setting out the tree he was excused from declamation that week.

LOCALS.

Two weeks for repairs and recreation.

A change in our Geographics is sadly needed.

A pleasanter Winter was never known in Bethel.

A course of lectures by home talent has been suggested.

Those who ride the pony are liable to be thrown off.

Broadway is not so far behind. It has three new street lamps.

Rev. Mr. Mills has resumed service at the Congregational Church.

Many thanks to the press, which has so kindly noticed our efforts.

We are glad to learn that Mr. Hastings is to be retained another term as First Assistant.

The Spring Term begins Tuesday, February 26th. Read the advertisement in another column.

The recitation room will receive several new desks and be otherwise repaired before the opening of the Spring Term.

That "Star of the East" should have been located on the corner of Main and Broad streets.

We call attention to the advertisement of the Bethel Steam Mills Co. A good opportunity is offered to those desiring work for the season.

We hear nothing of the proposed talk in reference to securing funds for repairing the Academy. We hope the friends of the school have not lost their interest in the matter.

We notice a change in the firm of Woodbury, Purington & Co. Mr. Wesley K. Woodbury leaves the firm to go into business with a friend in Pennsylvania. Mr. W. was much interested in our school and in the cause of education generally, and we are sorry to lose him from our midst. We can only wish him success, and hope he may find as many friends in his new home as he has left in Bethel.

The Bethel Steam Mills Company are doing an extensive logging business this Winter, and notwithstanding the unfavorable character of the season, expect to get in eight and a half millions of spruce, which is the largest amount they have ever collected in one drive. They are cutting about four millions on their own township on the Dead Diamond; one and a half millions on the Megalloway and Cambridge; and three millions and upwards on the Androscoggin. They have also advertised for large amounts of hard wood, and, we understand, intend to go largely into this branch of their business another season. The machinery which they have been putting in this Winter, will dispose of all their waste by steam power, and if they build the proposed addition in the Spring, they will surely have one of the most convenient and best equipped mills in the State.
